Synopsis

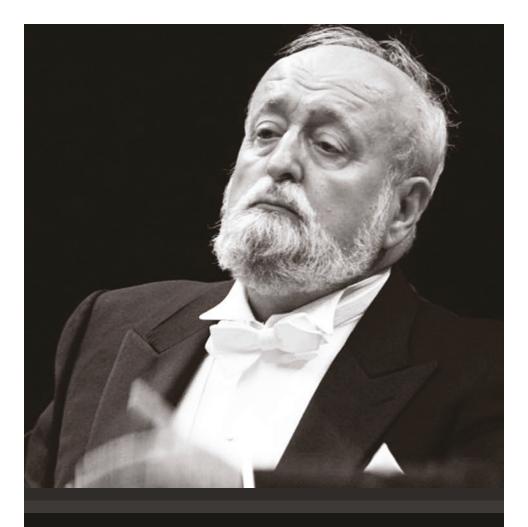

Act I

As a birthday treat to himself, King Ouf I scours the city in search of a suitable victim to execute. The ambassador Hérisson de Porc-Epic and his wife, Aloès, enter with his secretary, Tapioca, and Laoula, the daughter of the king of a neighboring country. They are traveling incognito, and the princess is being passed off as Hérisson's wife. Their mission, of which Laoula is unaware, is to marry her to Ouf. Complications arise when Laoula and a poor peddler, Lazuli, fall in love at first sight. Scolded for flirting, Lazuli insults the disguised king and thus becomes a desired candidate for death by impalement. However Siroco, the king's astrologer, reveals that the fates of the king and the peddler are inextricably linked; the stars predict that they will die within 24 hours of each other. Fortunes change again, and Lazuli is escorted with honors into the palace.

Act II

Lazuli, feted and well fed, grows bored with luxury and longs for Laoula. Ouf, still unaware of the disguises, furthers the lovers' hopes of marriage by imprisoning the supposed husband, Hérisson. The lovers depart, but Hérisson escapes and orders the peddler to be shot. Gunfire is heard, but although Laoula is brought in, there is no sign of Lazuli. Ouf bemoans his impending death.

Act III

Lazuli, having escaped harm, overhears Ouf, Siroco, and Hérisson discussing the situation and eventually reveals himself to Laoula. They plan a second elopement. The king and Siroco try to raise their spirits with a large glass of green chartreuse. Ouf, desperate to produce an heir to the throne, plans to marry Laoula, even if for an hour, but finds that he has run out of time. However, when the clocks strike five and nothing happens, Ouf declares that the astrologer's predictions must have been wrong. The Chief of Police then appears with Lazuli, who was caught on his way out of the country. The King blesses Lazuli and Laoula's marriage to the cheers of all.

Program Notes

Musicology Ph.D. Candidate

Today, Emmanuel Chabrier is best known for his orchestral work España from 1883, but nineteenth-century audiences took interest in his earlier work: the operetta L'Étoile. Chabrier's friend, composer Henri Duparc, explained: "You tell me that his reputation dates from España. This is not exactly true: before España, a piece called L'Étoile was played at the Bouffes. It contained some absolutely exquisite passages, in which the humor and even the buffoonery always remained very musical and in which one often glimpsed the admirable musician, high in color and caressing in tone. . . . This short piece . . . to my mind, revealed Chabrier to be the only one, among all the musicians I knew, capable of creating a truly French comedy genre, at the same time droll and musical—something like the French Meistersinger." Early performances of L'Étoile did indeed bring Chabrier to the attention of a wide audience. The opportunity to have a stage work performed at a major public theater would not have been possible without the connections he built earlier before his professional music career began.

Chabrier's musical training began with piano and composition lessons at a young age. When his family moved to Paris, his musical studies continued. There Chabrier also earned a law degree, with the intention of following his father to become a civil servant, and quickly got a job at the Ministry of the Interior. With comfortable full-time employment, he spent his free time studying music and taking advantage of the many artistic benefits of living in Paris—access to teachers, artists, music, and performances. He continued to study piano and composition, supplementing his instruction by copying music scores by hand, a time-honored method of learning composition.

During these years, Chabrier attended and performed in the intimate concerts for select, invited audiences at elite Parisian salons and befriended leading musicians, poets, and visual artists in Paris, many of whom were tied to avant-garde movements. Among his friends were the Impressionist painter Manet, the Symbolist poets Mallarmé and Verlaine, and musicians D'Indy, Fauré, Chausson, and Duparc. Chabrier and many of his artist friends were looking for new directions in their respective art forms. Some found inspiration in the short-lived production of Wagner's Tannhäuser at the Paris Opéra in 1861; for the poet Baudelaire this opera promised a new path for modern art. Chabrier was enthusiastic about Wagner's music as well, copying out the complete score of the Tannhäuser in 1862 and joining a group of Parisian Wagnerites who called themselves Petit Bayreuth.

It was through this network of artists that Chabrier was exposed to diverse styles and philosophies of art, had opportunities to share his work, and made connections that led to specific compositions. His friendship with Verlaine led to collaborations on Chabrier's first two operettas. While visiting the studio of the painter Alphonse Hirsch, Chabrier had a chance encounter with the librettists Eugène Leterrier and Albert Vanloo, who were looking for a composer to set their newest work, L'Étoile. They were impressed after hearing Chabrier's songs and asked him to compose the score. He accepted the commission and within a few months the music for the operetta was completed. On November 28, 1877, L'Étoile premiered at the Théâtre des Bouffes-Parisiens, the central theater for operetta in Paris. The initial run of 48 performances achieved critical success, leading to publishing contracts and future collaborations on stage works for Chabrier. Within two years, he quit his job at the ministry and devoted the rest of his life to a career in music.

Like other operettas, L'Étoile employs spoken dialogue and farcical tone, but Chabrier, influenced by his studies of Wagner, uses more adventurous, surprising harmonies, and a more nuanced chromatic language than other composers of this genre. Humor is a key feature of both the work's genre, opéra bouffe, and descriptions of Chabrier's musical style. It is present in the libretto at every level, from the detail of naming the characters Ouf (Phew) and Hérisson de Porc-Épic (Hedgehog of Porcupine) to the larger themes critiquing the institution of marriage and the power of the nobility. Musical humor is deployed through reprising musical themes and texts throughout the work with different connotations, as in "Donnez-vous la peine de vous asseoir" ("Give yourself the trouble to sit down"). This passage appears at three discrete points in the opera, and each time it accompanies a character sitting on a different chair and signals a different type of trouble or pain that can come from it. Another form of humor is achieved through manipulation of musical style. The Act III drinking song "La Chartreuse verte" mimics the style of an Italian opera aria of Donizetti's era. Added irony comes from the choice of the spirit to be consumed. Chartreuse, a French liqueur touted as an elixir of life by its makers, the Carthusian monks, is imbibed when two characters are trying to accept their fate of death.

L'Étoile combines French comedic opéra bouffe elements with Chabrier's musical humor and Wagnerian harmonies to create what Duparc calls "the French Meistersinger." The enthusiastic reception of this work led Chabrier to a career in music, and its musical language inspired generations of French composers from Debussy to Poulenc.
